A Farm, a Barn, an Agribusiness Stone House Lavender

What do you do when you inherit 25 acres of farmland? You could sell it, let it lie fallow or you could do what Mit Abbott did – turn that property into a money-making agriculture venture called Stone House Lavender Farm and Barn. Abbott was born on her family's farm in Whitehall, just outside of Fairmont, where they raised some cows, pigs, chickens and a couple gardens.

"We lived off the land," explains Abbott. "We know this farm has been in the family for seven generations. It goes back further, but we're not sure exactly how far. But the stone house at the bottom on the hill was built in 1850. I'm the seventh generation living there. My kids are the eighth."

When Abbott's father passed away in 2015, she and her brother Mark Weaver inherited the property. Unsure what to do with the land, the siblings and their spouses tossed around a few ideas.

"We were just thinking, 'What can we do to revitalize the farm?' My brother read an article about growing lavender on abandoned surface mines here in West Virginia, and he said we should look into it," recalls Abbott.

They did a little research and decided to give lavender a go.

"We started this in 2017, and our farming experience had nothing to do with lavender," laughs Abbott. "We bought 36 plants as a test plot to see if we could do it. One of the things SEPTEMBER 2022 | VOLUME 106, NO. 9 about lavender is it's drought-dependent. The roots like to stay dry. Our fields have lots of rocks, because of that, we were able to get a lot of drainage off the plants."

Those plants flourished and soon they decided to add more.

"The original idea was we were going to plant this farm with just lavender and wholesale it. However, it takes 225 plants to create an ounce of essential oil. That's a crazy number," Abbott says. "So, we ended up buying a thousand plants. After that we said, 'What else can we do to make this venture profitable?' We found out there was a niche market for agritourism. So, we switched course and evolved from wholesaling to agritourism."

Stone House Lavender started hosting u-pick events in 2019. People loved to come to the farm, walk through the lavender field and take it all in. That's when the family decided to dream big.

"We researched what would go good with a lavender farm. We determined that an event venue would be a good marriage, no pun intended, with the lavender fields. In 2020, in the midst of the pandemic, we decided to build a venue for social gatherings, and it really worked out well. We weren't able to host events that summer because of the pandemic; that's when we did our construction work. By the time things started opening up again at the end of 2020, our venue was ready. We hosted about six weddings that fall."

The barn, as they refer to their venue, is 5,680 square feet. It overlooks the lavender field and can seat up to 160 guests. It has a bride suite, a man-cave for the groom and a prep kitchen. In 2021, Stone House Lavender booked 34 weddings.

"We are busy," stresses Abbott. "This is a sidehustle for us. I work for an insurance company during the day. My husband C.L. is a teacher > at Fairmont Sr. Mark is retired from the State Police but helps take care of his granddaughter, and his wife, Cheryl, works for a foster care agency. Our weekends and evenings are dedicated to this business."

If offering u-picks and hosting weddings weren't enough, Stone House Lavender also holds yoga classes in the lavender field once a week. And to top it off, Abbott and Cheryl have created a line of products using their lavender.

"We make everything in our kitchens – the lotions, the soaps, the scrubs, the sprays, the bath bombs – everything! We kept trying recipes. If they didn't work, we tweaked them. We got to the point where we would use our friends as test dummies," says Abbott with a smile. "We finally got to the point where we were satisfied with the products."

You can purchase their products on the farm or online.

"We'd like to diversify more, and we're looking for other options and opportunities that would be appealing to the community. But we want to be thoughtful about it," says Abbott. "We leave one weekend a month free on our calendar. Our plan is to host an event, maybe do something like farm to table dinners. That's our vision."

The Stone House Lavender Barn is nearly booked through the end of the wedding season, and they're filling up fast for 2023. Abbott says they take a nice long vacation from the lavender business from November through March. But come April, it's back to weddings, u-picks and whatever ventures they come up with next.

You can visit Stone House Lavender Farm and Barn on their website, stonehouselavender.com.

FROM THE COMMISSIONER: WVDA Continues to Plan for the Worst

Since the start of the COVID-19 pandemic, our country has faced crisis after crisis. From food shortages to foreign conflicts, natural disasters to economic hardships, the people of our country have endured. The old mantra, "It's not a matter of if, but when" has certainly rung true. As an agency that puts the safety of our citizens first, the West Virginia Department of Agriculture (WVDA) has continually preached "expect the unexpected." For the past five years, we have developed and practiced emergency action plans and worked to build resiliency. We know the better our planning and exercising before a disaster or emergency strikes, the better the outcome.

We can never avoid all issues that arise during a crisis, but we can certainly limit the damage and suffering. This has been evidenced during the past year, as WVDA planning has helped protect and mitigate damage to our agricultural industries. Earlier in the year, we avoided Avian Influenza that hit 36 states. Perhaps luck or our mountainous terrain played a part, but the tireless work of a well-trained and disciplined animal health staff cannot be dismissed. These employees surveyed, tested, sampled and educated poultry producers on good biosecurity practices. They also implemented communication with our federal and industry partners just as we planned and exercised.

West Virginia did not avoid every animal disease outbreak this year. We saw a small outbreak of swine influenza that infected six pigs and at least three children at the Jackson County Fair. Our staff once again responded quickly and collaborated with local health officials and DHHR to push information out and contain the disease. These quick actions were only possible because our staff has been trained in proper response. Their efforts in table-top and real-life exercises have become second nature when responding to these situations. The steps taken avoided misinformation and panic during peak fair and festival season. This is important in protecting our citizens as we know how quickly this disease can spread as we saw during a large outbreak in 2009.

These real-life scenarios are reminders of how WVDA staff have responded to the needs of our citizens, but they are not the only ways we serve. Many do not realize the WVDA has a seat on the Governor's COVID task force. That coordination proved valuable in many areas related to keeping our local food systems open during the pandemic. In similar fashion, we often help with flood response and animal control because we have experts on staff who can assist responders in these situations. At the same time, the WVDA continues to be on the front line of controlling invasive pests like the gypsy moth and spotted lanternfly. Implementing actions and planning for these pests are just as important as any other threat to our economy and environment. Regardless of the disaster, our staff stands ready to respond.

As we adjust and adapt to our everchanging world, the WVDA continues to plan for worst-case scenarios. We know it's not if, but when new threats will arise that put our citizens at risk. It's through continued training and practice that our staff hones their skills. Our goal is to expect the unexpected and be able to respond when those darkest days come. Regardless of the situation, I can assure you the citizens of West Virginia have a team second to none working for them at the WVDA. We are ready to respond.

Potomac Horse Fever (PHF)

From late spring to early fall, many equine owners may become increasingly concerned about Potomac Horse Fever (PHF). PHF is a seasonal and sporadic bacterial infection in horses that has been reported in most U.S. states. The bacterium that causes PHF is Neorickettsia risticii; however, a novel species, Neorickettsia, N. findlayensi, has also been identified and is experimentally capable of causing disease. Horses with PHF develop a sudden and potentially fatal colitis. Horses of all ages can be affected, but it is not as common in horses less than a year old. Clinical signs often include depression, anorexia, fever and mild to severe diarrhea. More severe cases can result in laminitis, colic and even death. Abortion is possible in pregnant mares with PHF.

Neorickettsia risticii infects trematodes which parasitizes freshwater snails. During periods of warm weather, the snail releases infective larva. Horses become infected by ingesting snail larva from the water or ingesting infected aquatic insects. Many reported cases are strongly associated with horses having access to grazing pastures next to rivers, lakes, ponds or other bodies of water.

PHF is not contagious. Limiting exposure to ill or recovering horses is not critical. However, limiting access to freshwater water sources and ponds during summer months may help to reduce exposure. Treatment includes tetracycline antibiotics and fluids. At this time, vaccination has not been shown to be fully protective against infection, but it has been reported to reduce severity of clinical signs. Due to seasonality, the vaccination should be given prior to peak incidence which is during the summer into fall. Contact your veterinarian for the best vaccination schedule for your horse.

Veterans and Heroes to Agriculture: Can Do, Won't Quit Bruce McDuffee / Blue Sky Orchards

If you would have asked Bruce McDuffee if he envisioned a life in agriculture 10 years ago, he would've said, "Not a chance!" But these days, when he looks out over his 72acre farm in Bluefield. he tends to see life differently.

"I didn't see myself doing it. My whole career after the Navy was pretty much sales and marketing. I would sit at a desk, in front of a computer, moving the mouse around typing stuff. However, when I got to the farm, I was actually using my hands to do things. It was just refreshing," said Bruce.

Blue Sky Orchards is a family-run orchard named, appropriately, after its southern WV location. Bruce along with his wife Laurie, son Nick and daughter in-law Kristin all play a role in the farm's success. Although a relatively new endeavor, the orchard has already seen success through their seasonal u-pick offerings of blackberries, apples, peaches and cherries.

the right, with son Nick) says it takes a can-do attitude to make it all work.

"The idea of the business is not to be a pure wholesale orchard but to be an agritourism business. Our goal is to have folks come up and be able to pick their own fruits. We want them to just enjoy being on the farm. It's a really, pretty location," he said.

As a veteran of the U.S. Navy and a member of the WVDA's Veterans and Heroes to Agriculture program, Bruce has seen first-hand how his time spent as a Division Officer is carrying over into the orchard's management.

"When you're up here on the farm working and something fails, you've got to fix it and keep going," he said. "In the Navy, we call that a can-do attitude. I think that can-do attitude was so essential, and I believe that carried over in my psyche to farm work."

For more information about Blue Sky Orchards, follow them on Facebook where they are quick to respond. Interested in our Veteran's and Heroes to Agriculture program? Learn more by visiting the WVDA's website.

Tabitha: When I was growing up, we lived near Redding, PA. My friends there convinced me to join 4-H. The first year, I raised a bottle heifer. Her name was Princess. I decided that 4-H was really cool and wanted to keep going. We moved to Sinks Grove three years ago. Every year I raise a beef steer from our family farm, Windy Valley. But what I really love is tractors and tractor-pulling. I started out pulling a John Deere 4020. My dad and grandfather built a Ford 9000. My grandfather passed away before he got to pull it, so, now I pull it. It's cool to go to competitions, meet new people and see what they're doing with their tractors. That's how I get some of my ideas. I'm usually the only girl out there. It surprises a lot of people to see me out there doing it. I just competed at the tractor driving contest at the WV FFA Convention at Cedar Lakes in Ripley. I placed 8th out of 35 boys! I want to be a mechanic when I grow up, so working on tractors helps me to learn. I'm getting ready to build my own tractor! WEXTENSION Mhat's

Spiced Slow Cooker AppleSauce

Mike Deardorff, Charleston

- 8 apples peeled, cored, and thinly sliced
- 1/2 cup water
- ³/₄ cup packed brown sugar
- 1/2 teaspoon pumpkin pie spice

Step 1

Combine the apples and water in a slow cooker.

Step 2 Cook on Low for 6 to 8 hours.

Step 3 Stir in the brown sugar and pumpkin pie spice.

Step 4 Continue cooking another 30 minutes.

Step 5

Serve warm or chilled.

Produce Tips:

- If an apple is overripe and soft, use for cooking.
- Store apples by wrapping up individual fruits in newspaper or tissue paper. Place the wrapped apples onto trays that allow air to circulate.
- You can also store apples unwrapped, but the fruits should not touch. Different varieties store for different lengths of time, so keep them separate and eat those that won't store as long first.

An Apple a Day...

September is apple harvest here in West Virginia. In fact, West Virginia ranks 8th in the country for apple production. From Golden Delicious to McIntosh, we grow a wide variety of apples. We also celebrate that harvest with fairs and festivals like the Mountain State Apple Harvest Festival (Martinsburg, Oct. 13-16), Golden Delicious Festival (Clay, Sept. 15-18) and the Apple Butter Festival (Berkeley Springs, Oct. 8-9) to name a few. We hope you'll celebrate our harvest by purchasing West Virginia grown apples and then incorporating them into some delicious recipes! If you have a recipe you'd like to share, send them to marketbulletin@wvda.us.

Some say bigger is better, but that's not the case when it comes to Oh My Greens. For Matthew Hammack, smaller is the key. He is the owner of the microgreen operation in Charleston. Microgreens are young vegetables, usually harvested between 1-3 inches. Even though they're small, they are a nutrient powerhouse. Microgreens are considered one of the most nutrient dense superfoods on Earth, containing higher vitamin, mineral and antioxidant levels than their mature counterparts.

Big Dreams

"So, I started Oh My Greens on one little rack in my house. I set up my first market event on April 18 of last year [2021], and it sold really well," remembers Hammack.

Fast forward a year and a half and the business is growing. Oh My Greens, headquartered in a greenhouse in Kanawha City, produces microgreens such as radishes, sunflowers, red acre cabbage and so much more.

"Most of our crops are 11 days from seed to harvest, and we use coconut corn mix with perlite. We grow our greens in 10x20 flats, vertically. It really doesn't take up much space," explains Hammack. "We have a whole new process with our aeroponic towers, which is again vertically grown. You don't use much water, and it's just really good for the environment."

Hammack's vision has always been as large as his aeroponic towers are tall. The towers help maximize Hammack's limited space. Oh My Greens new location is a significant upgrade considering the business was operating out of his converted living room for the first year.

"I demoed out my living room and dining room and built a grow area. The business just kept scaling up, and I realized I was running out of room. So, I'm very grateful that I got this place," says Hammack.

The idea for Oh My Greens came from Hammack's lifestyle.

"What got me interested in microgreens was I was really going through a health kick in my life. It was during the pandemic. The last two years before that, I started getting into gardening, and I really had a love for it and coming up with innovative ideas on how to do it in a small area," Hammack reflects. "Seeing microgreens could be grown indoors and year-round, I knew I could start a business."

Hammack kickstarted the business using his stimulus checks. Since then, he has found success and is making a name for himself.

"It's great seeing the excitement from the community, especially here in Charleston. I have chefs reaching out from Huntington and Milton who are interested in the product," Hammack notes with excitement. He sees Oh My Greens as another addition to West Virginia's diverse agriculture offerings. "I think we fit into the scene really well; especially for the fact that, you know, we are a four-season state. I can provide nutrient dense superfoods all year round. That just provides a lot to the consumers," he says.

Part of his success comes from the help he gets from coworkers who stepped in as the business began evolving.

"I really love it's now a family business. It's my two best friends and my parents. I get to work with them every day," Hammack says happily.

Oh My Greens allows Hammack to do something he's passionate about as well as provide a product that is beneficial in nature.

"I don't just like what I do, I love what I do! I really get to see that I'm making a difference, you know, especially in people's diets, making them feel healthier. I just absolutely love that. There's nothing better that I could imagine doing," he says with a smile.

Oh My Greens can be found in several restaurants and stores in the Kanawha Valley including Drug Emporium, 1010 Bridge and Ristorante Abruzzi. Customers can also pick up micro-greens from Oh My Green's headquarters at 1416 MacCorkle Avenue in Charleston. They're also available for home delivery and can be found on their website at OhMyGreens.app. Be sure to follow them on Instagram and Facebook. Oh My Greens is a member of the WVDA's WV Grown program.
