STATE FAIR TIME AGAIN

Yes it is August and that means it is State Fair time again.

We have some exciting new twists planned for our Agriculture Building with twice daily short courses being offered to everyone who wants to learn about a variety of topics that will include tips from the experts on backyard flocks, high tunnel and greenhouse construction and operation, raising your own popcorn, planting and harvesting edible landscapes, beekeeping and honey production, sheep shearing, and pest identification and treatment.

Other classes are planned and we encourage you to stop by and check out our free daily offerings.

We will also again use the backdrop of the State Fair to enshrine some special ladies into the state Women's Agriculture Hall of Fame, recognizing their lifelong achievements. Check the September edition of The Market Bulletin for more on these deserving recipients.

Of course we will have many other informational displays while assisting with the livestock shows and other activities that help to make the annual staging of the State Fair a true celebration of our agricultural heritage, while at the same time looking at what great opportunities lie ahead for us.

Rita and I look forward to seeing many of you on the fairgrounds in Fairlea!

AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY HALL OF FAME INDUCTS 2014 CLASS

On the evening of July 19 at Jackson's Mill, we recognized five fine individuals that have spent their lifetimes bettering the agriculture and forestry industry in West Virginia. This year, three were inducted for agriculture: Robert "Bob" Barnitz of Bob's Greenhouses in Mason County, Richard McClung, originally from Greenbrier County and a longtime Angus breeder and Roscoe Plumley (deceased), longtime Extension agent and educator. On the Forestry side, Jack Sturgill, of Petersburg, who had a long career with Westvaco and was a promoter of safer harvesting practices and Mark Metz (deceased), a proponent of detailed written forest management plans and a founding member of the Woodland Owners of WV. See photos in the September Market Bulletin.

OUR FUTURE WV AGRICULTURE LEADERS GATHER

I wish you all could have joined me at Cedar Lakes a few weeks ago to witness the power of our future for agriculture in West Virginia.

During my visit, I had the chance to converse with many of the 500 or so students there to learn about what's happening today and what's in store for agriculture in the days, months and years ahead.

I can't express to you enough how encouraging it was to listen to these bright and committed young people. Hope certainly abounds with this generation of doers.

REGIONAL APPROACH BEING EYED TO ADVANCE FARM TO SCHOOL

County food service directors from five surrounding counties gathered recently at Tucker County High School to see the ways the Tucker County vo-ag and ProStart programs are partnering to grow and preserve fresh produce for the school cafeteria.

ProStart is a culinary education program that provides students with an overview of the food and hospitality industry, including kitchen skills such as cleaning and prepping fresh produce.

The idea is, if students can handle some of the upfront work, school cooks will be able to utilize more local produce in their Farm To School (FTS) programs without being overwhelmed by cleaning and preparation.

Besides simply demonstrating what individual counties can do, the meeting was also the first step in what hopefully will become a regional approach to Farm To School.

The more I meet with people involved in FTS, the more convinced I am of the profound affect it can have on our children. I consistently hear works like "pride," excited," and "willing to try new foods." Every day they eat more food, grown by a local farmer – or better yet, grown by the students themselves.

FTS is a tremendous opportunity. As I've noted before, we spend $100 million a year on school food and very little of that total goes to our farmers. Now is the perfect time to begin planning for next year's FTS effort. If you're interested, I suggest you approach your local food service director or board of education and find out what they'd like to have in the fall.

COMMUNITY GARDENS PROJECT UNDERWAY IN WOOD COUNTY

I recently joined with Parkersburg Mayor Robert Newell and Highmark Blue Cross Blue Shield of West Virginia president Fred Earley to break ground on a new Community Gardens project that will be located adjacent to the recently opened Farmers Market at Point Park Marketplace.

The gardens - being constructed thanks to a very generous $10,000 donation from Highmark - will initially consist of 50 beds that will serve as a teaching spot for students from three local schools. It will also be made available for community members to learn how to grow and harvest fresh, healthy food.

While there are other community gardens situated at various locations across the state, we hope more private businesses will follow Highmark's lead to establish more projects like this.

Educating and assisting our residents in this learning process only serves as a great example of how we can advance agriculture in urban settings.

As you can see, agriculture is alive and well in West Virginia and I will continue to keep you updated every month on the various ways we're moving forward.

Farm Bill Funding Available to Organic Producers and Handlers

Funds to assist with Organic Certification Costs

The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) recently announced that approximately $13 million in Farm Bill funding is now available for organic certification cost-share assistance, making certification more accessible than ever for small certified producers and handlers.

The certification assistance is distributed through two programs within the Agricultural Marketing Service. Through the National Organic Certification Cost-Share Program, $11.5 million is available to all 50 states, the District of Columbia, and five U.S. Territories.

Through the Agricultural Management Assistance Organic Certification Cost-Share Program, an additional $1.5 million is available to organic operations in Connecticut, Delaware, Hawaii, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Utah, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wyoming.

These programs provide cost-share assistance through participating states to USDA certified organic producers and handlers for certification-related expenses they incur from October 1, 2013 through September 30, 2014. Payments cover up to 75 percent of an individual producer's or handler's certification costs, up to a maximum of $750 per certification. To receive cost-share assistance, organic producers and handlers should contact their state agencies. Each state will have their own guidelines and requirements for reimbursement, and the National Organic Program (NOP) will assist states as much as possible to successfully implement the programs. State contact information can be found on the NOP Cost Share Website, www.ams.usda.gov/NOPCostSharing.

For additional information contact Dana Stahl, Organic Certification Cost Share Program Manager, Dana.Stahl@ams.usda.gov, (540) 361-1126. Additional information is available on the NOP's website at www.ams.usda.gov/NOPCostSharing.

The NOP is responsible for ensuring the integrity of USDA organic agricultural products in the United States and throughout the world. Find out more about organic certification by visiting www.ams.usda.gov/nop.

Highmark WV Pledges Funding for New Parkersburg Community Garden

Parkersburg residents will soon have a multi-purpose community garden at Point Park Marketplace thanks to the city of Parkersburg, Downtown PKB, the Wood County Development Authority, the West Virginia Department of Agriculture (WVDA) and Highmark Blue Cross Blue Shield West Virginia, which has pledged to fund the project. The city will handle construction.

The purpose of the project is to provide a park-like atmosphere for people to work together, build community bonds, provide educational opportunities and grow fresh produce for participants, schools and local food banks.

The garden will include 49 raised-bed plots – including five handicap-accessible beds. The garden will also include a fountain, sidewalks and 16-by-20 greenhouse to be used for educational projects. The greenhouse will be funded by a grant from the Highmark Foundation. The garden will be available for use for fall crops later this year and there is also plenty of room for future expansion, organizers say.

“At Highmark West Virginia, our efforts to become a more sustainable company align with our corporate vision and values to improve the health of our customers and to improve the health of the communities we serve,” said Fred Earley, Highmark Blue Cross Blue Shield West Virginia president. “By funding this community garden, we are not only continuing our support for an enhanced and well-rounded experience in downtown Parkersburg, but are also providing a means for the members of our community to build better skills for healthy living. We’re proud to be a part of it.”

“We want private citizens and private industry to get into agriculture and learn the trade, then move agriculture to a whole new level that West Virginia has never seen before,” said Commissioner of Agriculture Walt Helmick. “We import $7.3 billion worth of food into West Virginia and we only grow a half-billion. We have a tremendous opportunity to make up that difference. This is a great direction and we appreciate Mayor Newell’s leadership on this project.”

“FARM USE”

Application Deadline

The Legislative Rule governing farm use valuation requires that that the application must be filed with the Assessor on or before September 1 of each year. Please note the term “filed with the Assessor” has been determined to mean actually in the Assessor’s office by that date and not simply postmarked by that date. Also note that if September 1 falls on a weekend or holiday, the deadline is extended to the first business day after the weekend or holiday.

High tunnels extending WV growing seasons

Jean Smith, Director, WVDA Marketing & Development Division

West Virginians are still able to enjoy the bounties of local gardens! Fortunately, many West Virginians are expanding their growing seasons by building high tunnel greenhouses. These facilities enable us to enjoy fresh fruits and veggies earlier in the spring and later in the fall. If you are able to preserve these home grown goodies by freezing, drying or canning them – I encourage you to do so. – Happy Cooking!

WVDA Hemlock Woolly Adelgid Program Expanding

Commissioner of Agriculture Walt Helmick has announced that the West Virginia Department of Agriculture's (WVDA) Hemlock Woolly Adelgid (HWA) Program has expanded to include all counties currently infested with HWA.

"Additional counties were found to be infested this year so our Plant Industries Division staff has expanded our HWA program. Landowners in those counties will now be allowed to participate," said Commissioner Helmick.

"The hemlock woolly adelgid (Adelges tsugae) is a non-native, invasive pest that is quickly decimating hemlocks (Tsuga canadensis and T. caroliniana) in the eastern United States," said Quentin "Butch" Sayers, Assistant Director of PID with WVDA. "Without long-term control of HWA, eastern and Carolina hemlock will be significantly reduced, if not eliminated, throughout its natural range."

HWA causes damage to hemlocks by depleting the hemlock's starch reserves, which in turn reduces the trees' ability to grow and produce new shoots. All ages and size classes of hemlock are susceptible to HWA infestations, Sayers explained.

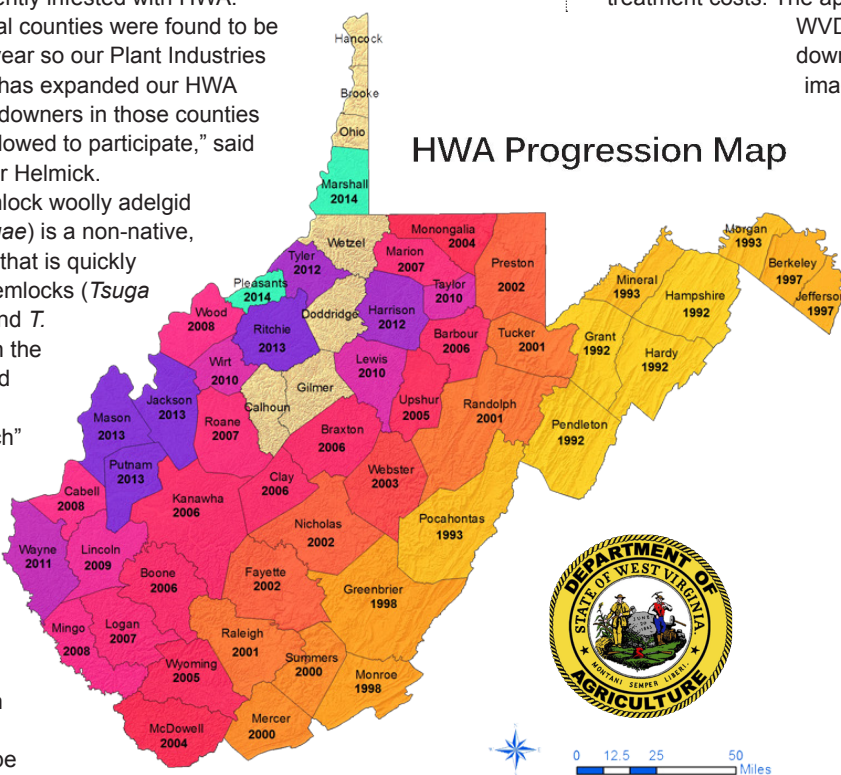

WVDA is now accepting applications from landowners who wish to sign up and participate in the WVDA HWA Program to help protect their hemlock trees. Landowners who want to participate in the HWA Cooperative Program must complete an application and submit it, along with a $100 deposit that will be applied to treatment costs. The application can be received by calling the WVDA Charleston Office at (304) 558-2212 or downloading it at: http://www.wvagriculture.org/images/Plant_Industries/About_Us.html.

Landowners must apply for the program by September 30, 2014, provide WVDA with maps of their properties, and allow WVDA to evaluate their sites to ensure they meet the project qualifications:

- Only private lands within the project area are eligible.
- More than 50 percent canopy cover of hemlocks.
- A woodlot with a minimum of five acres. Adjacent and otherwise eligible landowners may cooperate to meet the minimum acreage requirement.
- Landowners with less than five acres may qualify if the proposed treatment area is adjacent to land being managed for HWA.
- Trees must have more than 50 percent foliage.
- Trees may not have been treated within the last four years.
- Treatment must not pose a safety risk to WVDA field personnel.
- Pesticides used in treatments must be purchased directly by WVDA.

Treatments usually protect trees four-to-five years. Cost share monies are available. However, landowners accepted for the program must pay for a portion of the treatments. Applying for the program does not obligate landowners to participate – they may back out if they feel their portion of the costs is too high.

Tucker County Promotes Regional Farm to School Concept with Food Preservation Demonstration

County food service directors from five surrounding counties gathered at Tucker County High School recently to see first-hand the ways that the Tucker County vo-ag and ProStart programs are partnering to grow and preserve fresh produce.

ProStart is the leading secondary education culinary program in the country, and Tucker County has the most ProStart students of any West Virginia school.

The idea is, if ProStart students can handle some of the upfront work associated with fresh fruits and vegetables, school cafeteria personnel will be able to utilize more local produce in their Farm To School programs.

Besides simply demonstrating what individual counties can do, the meeting was the first step in what hopefully will become a regional approach to utilizing local foods in schools, both as a source of nutritious food, and as a practical career education opportunity for students.

"You don't always see many instances of counties working together," said Dr. Allen Arnold, director of the Collaborative for the 21st Century Appalachia, a member-organization in the West Virginia Farm To School Community Development Group. "But what we've seen is that the chef teacher here is saying 'I'm producing these kinds of things here and I could buy some of my ingredients from neighboring counties and I could sell my value-added products that we're producing over in your county."

"It's really building a sense of a regional food system so that Farm To School is still local, but at the same time, the amount that a school could buy is enlarged tremendously because you have that much larger a base," said Dr. Arnold.

"What we're looking to do here is give a broader context – a deeper context – to what our culinary students are learning," said Donna Wilkes, Coordinator of Hospitality and Tourism programs for the West Virginia Department of Education's (WVDE) Office of Career and Technical Instruction.

"We're beginning to see it as more than just being able to move into one part of the industry – [we're] seeing it as part of the community ... something our students can begin to look at, not just as careers, but as an entrepreneurial opportunity as well."

There is a tremendous opportunity for food production and processing in West Virginia, according to West Virginia Commissioner of Agriculture Walt Helmick.

"This is a perfect example of my vision of agriculture in our state: West Virginians growing food to be processed by West Virginians for West Virginians," said Commissioner Helmick.

"I strongly encourage other school systems to look into this model, which proves that with a little ingenuity and the willingness to try something different, we can accomplish so many good things for our state."

The Preston County High School ProStart program spent about $1,000 for a commercial vacuum sealer to package items for a trip to the walk-in freezer. It takes about 10-15 seconds to remove the air from and seal a bag of chopped onions.

Participants tour the Tucker County High School greenhouse.

Participants toured the Tucker County greenhouse, high tunnel and ProStart kitchen, enjoyed a locally sourced lunch, and had the chance to use the school's vacuum sealer machine. Chef Brian Covell's ProStart program manufactured 200 canned products and processed 1,000 pounds of vegetables in its first year. He said he expects those numbers to increase dramatically next year.

Produce canned in the traditional fashion by Tucker County culinary students sits on display while ProStart, Farm To School and county food service personnel enjoy a locally sourced lunch in the background. The group met to see ways Tucker County is growing and preserving food for its Farm To School program and to lay the groundwork for related regional projects.

Preston County kale chips a hit with Energy Express kids

“Kale” and “chips” aren’t words you typically see in the same sentence, much less adjacent to each other. But the term may become more common if an informal experiment conducted there proves accurate elsewhere.

About 40-50 children attending the Preston County Energy Express summer reading and nutrition program at Kingwood Elementary ate kale chips – and liked them.

Vista Volunteer Kathy Opal, also a school cook, and Dylan Beitz, the new food service director for Preston County Schools in the Kingwood Elementary School cafeteria surrounded by “kale chips.”

“I told them we would be eating ‘alien chips,’ and rewarded them with a sticker for trying them,” said Jennifer Kahly, an Americorps member working through the West Virginia Department of Education’s Office of Child Nutrition

Hunter Schaefer, 11, tries (and seems to like) kale chips that were made from local produce and served to children at the Energy Express summer reading and nutrition program at Kingwood Elementary.

(WVDE-OCN). “I would say about 60 percent of the kids loved them and were begging for more.”

The idea was to see if school cooks could take a locally grown product and turn it into an easy, nutritious recipe that students would eat in school cafeterias. The kale was sourced from Vested Heirs Farm. Cathy Opal, Vista Volunteer and school cook, got the recipe from the New School Cuisine cookbook.

The process is simple: sprinkle olive oil and salt over kale – preferably “curly” kale such as lacinato, spread out on a baking sheet, and put it in a 400-degree oven for 10 minutes.

“We sent kale chips home with kids who were begging for more,” said Kahly.

Farmers’ feedback sought on production and West Virginia food hub idea

The New Appalachian Farm & Research Center (NAFRC) & Downstream Strategies need your input as they work together to explore the feasibility of developing food hubs in West Virginia.

A food hub is a business or organization that actively manages the aggregation, distribution, and marketing of food products sourced locally and regionally to help increase farm revenue, expand production of fresh local food, and support the communities and businesses in the region.

Please complete this 15 minute survey for produce producers to help NAFRC understand your interests and challenges in expanding your farm operations, interest level in selling to a food hub, and concerns about wholesale selling.

Survey Link: <https://www.surveymonkey.com/s/V2DRQZ9>

The survey will be open until August 25, 2014. The information that you share can be completely confidential if you prefer. To compensate you for your time in completing this survey, all eligible survey respondents will receive a $10 Thank You gift card for completed surveys.

There is also an opportunity to list your vegetable farm in a producer directory that will be available to potential buyers in WV. This information will be kept separate from your survey answers.

If you would like to complete the survey but are unable to do so over the internet please write to Downstream Strategies, PO Box 325, Alderson, WV 24910.
