Kent’s Reflections

Reflecting Upon My First Few Weeks in Office

Since the November 8th election, I have had plenty of time to think about the great responsibility the people of West Virginia have chosen me for and the challenges we face as a state. In my first Market Bulletin column I would like to reflect on the first weeks as your Commissioner of Agriculture and the transition that has taken place at the West Virginia Department of Agriculture (WVDA).

First, I must say it is a great honor, privilege and I am truly humbled that the people of West Virginia have selected me to speak on behalf of our farmers and run one of the largest departments in the state. With that I just want to say thank you; thank you to every West Virginian for their support, faith and votes. The farming community was solidly behind our vision for West Virginia and showed it time and time again during the election cycle. While those of us in agriculture only make up about five percent of the electorate, it is humbling to be so strongly supported by my peers.

Secondly, I just want to take a moment and reflect on the willingness of outstanding professionals to leave quality jobs and join me in serving our state. These gentlemen share the same vision and believe West Virginia agriculture and the state have better days ahead of them. Therefore, please meet my top advisors as we move forward. Joe Hatton will serve as Deputy Commissioner and a liaison to organizations that we work with throughout the state. Joe has more than 20 years of experience and previously worked for the USDA.

Wayne Co. Farmers Cooperative membership skyrockets in first year

The Wayne County Farmers Co-op launched last year and already has a membership that many groups of its type would envy.

“We’ll be a year old this coming March, and we’ve grown to about 115 members,” says Wayne County Farmers Co-op President Patrick Fluty matter-of-factly. “Due to the fact of the unemployment here and the present state of southern West Virginia, the co-op is pushing agriculture.”

The effort has galvanized the community. Eighty people showed up for the group’s first meeting last spring and several became substantial contributors to the co-op’s summer farmers’ market in Dunlow. A building was donated to the group and renovation is almost done to have it ready to operate as a store and headquarters for the cooperative.

Besides typical produce items, co-op members are also becoming involved in mushroom cultivation and maple production. Fluty says there are three members starting maple production and about 10 members growing mushrooms. One has about 1,000 logs ready for inoculation this year. He said he expects that more than 30 farms will be substantial producers in 2017.

An anonymous $25,000 donation allowed the co-op to purchase two mushroom inoculation “guns,” along with supplies to help members build high and low tunnels. Rather than the larger, steel-tube kits, many of the members are favoring smaller, less-expensive tunnels constructed out of cow panels – essentially heavy-gauge fencing material. The co-op purchased 84 of those. A grant will help purchase a refrigerated trailer to transport products, and a new website should be up early in 2017.

“You can’t sit still farming; you’ve got to move on. We have to be very productive and efficient,” said Fluty. “I can’t believe the amount of food I’m growing compared to traditional farming.”

He added that there are five or six markets in and around Wayne County that cooperative members are serving or might be serving in the future.

“There’s property near Westmoreland that the county gave us for a market. We own the market in Dunlow, plus we hope to have our store open in Dunlow this year,” Fluty said. He also pointed out that some members are selling through the Wild Ramp market in Huntington and through Refresh Appalachia. Other marketing options are being explored as well.

Fluty’s efforts have also spilled over into the county’s education system. There had been no agriculture education programs in the county since 1999, but now all three high schools have programs. An old school building is also being considered as an agricultural center.

Norm Bailey will serve as my chief of staff. He is coming from the USDA as well and has the knowledge and skills to help me run the WVDA. Lastly, Crescent Gallagher will serve as the department’s Communications Director. Crescent brings fresh ideas and enthusiasm on how we can better market our farmers and their products.

With my last reflection for this month, I need to talk about the current and previous employees at the WVDA. From day one, I have received a warm welcome; your smiles have meant a lot to my wife, Shirley and me. We have met so many great individuals already and in the coming months I hope to meet the rest of the department stationed throughout the Mountain State. Please join me in thanking the previous administration and all public servants leaving office for their service to our great state. We at the WVDA wish them and their families good health, fair winds and following seas in their future endeavors.

As the new WVDA administration starts to get to work, we are immediately focusing on building a partnership with Governor Justice, Speaker Armstead and Senate President Carmichael to implement policies that move our agricultural industries forward. Governor Justice, in his inauguration speech, spoke about the importance of agriculture to West Virginia and I look forward to working with the Governor over the next four years to grow agriculture here in our state.

In closing, I want to encourage our readers to tell the positive stories of West Virginia. My department will be speaking about the beauty of our state, our great natural resources and the resilience of West Virginians. I know West Virginia has brighter days ahead of her, but nothing is ever accomplished without a team. Therefore, we are putting out a call to every citizen of the Mountain State; we need you! Never hesitate to promote the state, never hesitate to bring fresh ideas and never hesitate to pursue new opportunities. Put the people of West Virginia up to any challenge and they will succeed.

Semper Fidelis,

Kent A. Leonhardt, of Monongalia County, is sworn in as the 11th West Virginia Commissioner of Agriculture January 16, 2017.

WV CattleWomen to hold Collegiate Beef Advocacy Contest during the WV Beef Expo

The American National CattleWomen, Inc. (ANCW) has developed a new contest for college-age individuals. The Collegiate Beef Advocacy (CBA) Program was created for beef industry advocates interested in bridging the gap between the farm and the fork. This program connects the advocates interested in bridging the gap between influential leadership and industry advancement; facilitating the participant to become equipped to take on influential leadership roles contributing to the beef industry’s strategic direction and advocacy.

The West Virginia CattleWomen will be hosting the CBA Contest during the 2017 WV Beef Expo April 7-8. During 2018 ANCW/NCBA Convention, ANCW will have broad-spectrum recognition of the CBA Development Program; as well as a round-table discussion and introduction of the five-person team who will represent the program for the next year. The vision of this program is for recruitment, retention and industry advancement; facilitating the participant to become equipped to take on influential leadership roles contributing to the beef industry’s strategic direction and advocacy.

The contest will include several parts:
1. Application
2. 5-8 minute oral speech from written essay
3. 5-10 minute media interview

Contestant eligibility is as follows:
1. Ages between high school graduate-24 years old (before January 1st preceding selection)
2. Enrolled in College
3. Parent or Contestant a member of the WV CattleWomen’s Association.
4. Cattlemen & Cattlewomen are eligible.

Ag & Forestry Hall of Fame

NOMINATIONS

Deadline: Feb. 17, 2017

Due

Nominations for induction into the West Virginia Agriculture and Forestry Hall of Fame (WVAFHF) are now being accepted. The WVAFHF is devoted to honoring individuals, businesses, organizations, institutions and foundations who have contributed to the establishment, development, advancement or improvement of the agricultural, forestry and/or family life of West Virginia.

This honor is bestowed upon those who have lived in West Virginia, had a long-tenured association with agriculture, forestry and family life, have made outstanding, direct contributions to those industries and demonstrated the highest standards of leadership and contribution on a local, state, national and/or international level. The WVAFHF encourages all nominations, including those of women and minorities.

Nomination forms are available from:
• WV Agriculture and Forestry Hall of Fame website at http://bit.ly/2ggFSUW
• WV Department of Agriculture (Robin Gothard, 304-558-3200, rgothard@wvda.us)

All nomination forms must be received by February 17, 2017. Selected nominees will be enshrined during the WVAFHF Recognition Dinner to be held on July 15, 2017 at Jackson’s Mill.

Specialty Crop Block Grant

NOMINATIONS

Deadline: Feb. 17, 2017

Due

The West Virginia Department of Agriculture (WVDA) is accepting project proposals for the 2017 Specialty Crop Block Grant Program (SCBGP). The deadline to apply is by the close of business Feb. 17, 2017.

The grant program - funded by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and administered by the WVDA - gives specialty crop growers the opportunity to learn new techniques, test them out, and share that knowledge with other producers.

Grant applications must deal with a specialty crop such as fruits, vegetables, horticulture products, tree nuts, herbs and spices, maple syrup, honey, and Christmas trees, among others. Products explicitly excluded are livestock, eggs, corn, soybeans, and other commodity-type crops.

All projects must focus on industry related research, education, improved production, or marketing of specialty crops. The program is available to groups and organizations that qualify to receive grant funding but cannot be used to fund individual farms or enterprises.

For more information, contact Cindy Martel at cmartel@wvda.us. A full application package can be downloaded at http://www.agriculture.wv.gov/divisions/marketinganddevelopment/Pages/Grant-and-Training-Opportunities.aspx.
Mineral County Wins National Livestock Quiz Bowl

What does it take to win the National Livestock Quiz Bowl? A lot of hard work and determination, according to Carol Webb, the instructor for the newly crowned national champs from Mineral County.

The four-person team, made up of Derek Alt, Andrew Iser, Naomi Bane and Shawnee Michaels, were chosen last spring and won the state competition at Potomac State College back in April. For the past eight months, the FFA students soaked up information in the classroom and worked hundreds of hours after school to gain the knowledge they needed to beat the best of the best.

“These kids have a diverse knowledge of animal sciences. From bees to swine to current events in animal sciences, it takes a lot of work to be on this type of competitive level,” stressed Webb.

In order to win, the team answered questions like: name the four compartments of a rumen’s stomach (Answer: rumen, omasum, abomasum, reticulum) and what is the internal temperature of a cow (Answer: 101.5 degrees).

Webb and her team finished the national competition, held January 5-8 in Denver, Colo., undefeated. They were up against some tough teams including California, Texas and Utah.

Not only did the team take home first place, so did Derek Alt, who finished the competition with the highest individual score. Andrew Iser came in third place.

“I’m so proud of these young leaders. They did a fantastic job bringing the win back to West Virginia for a second year in a row,” said Webb. In 2016, Musselman High School in Berkeley County took first place at the National Livestock Quiz Bowl.

The Mineral County team also took part in leadership and team building activities as part of the four-day event.

February Grant Writing Workshops to Focus on Better Access to Ag Funds

The West Virginia Department of Agriculture in conjunction with West Virginia University Extension Service has announced two grant writing workshop opportunities. The first will be held Feb. 18 at the WVU Agricultural and Sciences Building from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., and the second, Feb. 21 at the Cedar Lakes Conference Center, Jackson County, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

These workshops will focus on improving the funding success rate of applicants to various grant programs, including the Farmers Market Promotion Program (FMPP) and the Local Food Promotion Program (LFPP), NESARE Farmer and Partnership Grants, Specialty Crop Block Grants, and others.

“Ambition and innovation come together with funding to create businesses. Grants are an amazing opportunity to acquire the capital startups need,” said West Virginia Agriculture Commissioner Kent Leonhardt. “These workshops provide essential tools for navigating the grant process and understanding what grantors want to see.”

The trainings will cover the fundamentals of grant writing to help applicants compete for competitive grants under The Agricultural Act of 2014, better known as the Farm Bill. The Farm Bill has authorized $30 million in grant funding annually through 2018 to develop new market opportunities for farm and ranch operations serving local and regional markets.

This is a free event, but registration is required and is available online. All materials and refreshments will be provided. The training is open to producers, producer groups, community leaders and agricultural service providers. The sessions are a collaboration of WVU Extension Service, West Virginia Department of Agriculture, West Virginia State University Extension and Northeast SARE (Northeast Sustainable Agriculture, Research and Education) programs.

Workshop Locations:

- North Session (WVU Evansdale Campus in the Agricultural Sciences Building, Morgantown) - Feb. 18, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.
- North Session Webcast - Feb. 18, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.
- South Session (Cedar Lakes Conference Center, Ripley) - Feb. 21, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Potomac State offering new two-year agriculture degree

Once upon a time, West Virginia farmers didn’t have to worry much about where their crops and animal products would sell. Local butchers took their meat, small corner markets ordered up crates of vegetables and fruits and milk arrived on your doorstep from the dairy down the road. A lot has changed and Potomac State College of West Virginia University is changing with the times as well. The college in Keyser, WV, is offering a new, two-year associate of applied science degree in sustainable agriculture entrepreneurship or SAGE for short.

Potomac State Plant Sciences Professor Donna Ballard, Ph.D., stresses today’s agriculture students need to know more than just how to raise a cow or grow corn.

“To be a successful farmer, you have to be able to do a lot of things, including marketing your product.”

The SAGE curriculum is based around basic business skills: business communications, accounting, horticulture, agronomics and animal production of food. They’ll also explore marketing different products.

“Food production systems are the largest food trend coming through agriculture at this time. It includes everything from safe food supplies to Farm-to-Table and the local movement, ” says Ballard. “We want to update our program so students can enter all those new areas of agriculture.”

Those accepted into the program will be doing a lot more than just textbook learning. SAGE is a hands-on degree. Much of that work will take place at a college-owned food hub. Potomac State and the Mineral County Development Authority are working together and hope to finalize a location for a food hub in the near future.

Graduates of the program will be able to start their own agribusinesses, from working in a large city with a project like rooftop beehives to taking over the family farm. The options are endless.

“Everybody likes to eat. They have to get their food from somewhere,” stresses Ballard. She says SAGE graduates will be able to market their own agriculture goods or work for someone else selling theirs.

Potomac State President Jennifer Ortikoff says the SAGE degree has tremendous potential to move farming forward.

“I think that because we are in the heart of some great agricultural opportunities, this is a good program to have in place to help our future farmers be successful and make money farming,” she said.

“Our goal is to get students into the production field as quickly as possible. When they graduate with this degree, we fully expect them to go out into the workforce,” added Ballard.

The SAGE program will be able to accommodate 20 to 25 students for the fall 2017 semester. If the demand is there, a plan is in place to expand. The college is currently working on creating a four-year bachelor of applied science degree in sustainable agriculture entrepreneurship by the fall semester of 2018.

Those interested in applying to the SAGE program can contact Potomac State College’s Enrollment Services Office at 304-788-6820 or go2psc@mail.wvu.edu.
Recipe Challenge Yields Heart Healthy Dishes

In 2016, the West Virginia Farmers Market Association in collaboration with the American Heart Association hosted a recipe challenge that started as a contest in search of the best heart-friendly fresh recipes and ended in a beautiful cookbook, West Virginia Foods & Flavors: Recipes from Farmers Markets. More than 80 recipes were submitted with winners from across the state chosen for grand prizes. Three farmers’ markets received pop-up kitchens based on the number of submissions from their markets. And three recipes were chosen to win cash prizes. Susan Maslowski, of Milton, was awarded third place for her Chicken Butternut Patties. Sherry Kaslowski, of Fairmont, won the second place prize for her Crust-less Quiche. And the grand prize was awarded to Elizabeth Wheeler of Shepherdstown for her Chicken Butternut Patties. These recipes along with several others have been collected and are available in a cookbook that was released this holiday season and can be purchased online by visiting the West Virginia Farmers Market Association website http://wvfarmers.org/recipe-challenge/.

country roads crustless quiche

Olive oil cooking spray
1 small onion
1 green pepper, chopped
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon pepper
1 cup fresh spinach, chopped
1 large tomato, chopped
6 eggs
2 egg whites
1 cup fat-free milk
4 ounces reduced-fat cheddar cheese, grated
½ cup thinly sliced green onions
1 clove fresh garlic, minced or crushed
½ cup chopped parsley
1 egg
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon olive oil

Heat oven to 350°F. Lightly spray olive oil in a large skillet over medium heat. Add the onion and green pepper. Cook until soft, about 10 minutes. Remove the pan from the heat. Put onions and peppers in a pie pan, spreading evenly across the bottom of the pan. Add spinach and tomato (both uncooked), spreading evenly over the onions and peppers. The pan will be fairly full.

In a bowl, beat the eggs and egg whites lightly with the milk, cheese, salt and pepper. Mix well. Form patties, using 1/4 cup for each patty. Place on a plate or flat pan, cover with plastic wrap, and refrigerate until ready to cook, at least 15 minutes or overnight. Brush a large skillet (preferably cast iron) with olive oil and heat over medium heat.

Cook the patties without crowding until the edges turn white and the bottoms are browned, about 4 minutes. Turn the patties and cook for another 3 to 4 minutes until firm and cooked through. Remove from the pan and keep warm in a low oven while you cook remaining patties.

Make the patties: Place the chicken breasts in the freezer to chill until firm, but not frozen (this will make it easier to chop them). Using a sharp knife, chop the chicken into tiny pieces by cutting the meat crosswise into 1/4-inch strips, then cut the strips crosswise in thin strips, and further chop to make a coarse mixture.

Put egg whites into a deep mixing bowl and add sugar and cake flour and fold into egg white mixture. Gradually add honey, beating continuously. Add vanilla. Sift sugar and cake flour and fold into egg white mixture. Pour into an ungreased tube pan and place in a cold oven. When temperatures reach 275 degrees wait 15 minutes and increase temperature to 325 degrees. Bake 1 hour or until cake springs back when touched.

Garnish:
2-3 large ripe tomatoes, quartered
1-2 cups lettuce or shredded cabbage
½ thinly sliced red onion and fresh herbs
Freshly ground black pepper

Serve with tomatoes and lettuce or shredded cabbage, thinly sliced red onion and herbs with the yogurt sauce on the side, and with pita bread, if desired. Cooked patties can be refrigerated and make a good take-along for lunch or a snack.

Chicken Butternut Patties:

Chicken Patties:
1 pound boneless, skinless
lean chicken breast halves
½ pound butternut squash, peeled, seeded, and grated
½ cup thinly sliced green onions
1 clove fresh garlic, minced or crushed
½ cup chopped parsley
1 egg
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon olive oil

Yogurt Sauce:
1 cup plain low-fat yogurt
1 clove fresh garlic, minced or

honey angel food cake

Chicken Butternut Patties:
1 clove garlic
1 cup butternut squash
1 egg
2 teaspoons cream of tartar

Put egg whites into a deep mixing bowl and add salt. Beat until frothy. Add cream of tartar and beat until the egg whites stand up in stiff peaks. Gradually add honey, beating continuously. Add vanilla. Sift sugar and cake flour and fold into egg white mixture. Pour into an ungreased tube pan and place in a cold oven. When temperatures reach 275 degrees wait 15 minutes and increase temperature to 325 degrees. Bake 1 hour or until cake springs back when touched.

Congratulations!

West Virginia Foods & Flavors: Recipes from Farmers Markets
www.wvfarmers.org/recipe-challenge/
Dark days of winter getting you down? Hungry for summer? The Winter Blues Farmers’ Market is the cure for what's ailing you.

Dozens of the state’s top food producers will take over the Charleston Civic Center Sunday, Feb. 12 from 1-5 p.m.

“It is vital that we back our homegrown farmers while keeping monies within our communities and this is a perfect opportunity to do just that,” said Commissioner of Agriculture Kent Leonhardt.

“The Winter Blues Market is a great chance for consumers to get high-quality and locally-produced products while supporting the agricultural community, especially during the cold winter months. This is one of the premier local food events in the state and we hope to see everyone in the Kanawha Valley there.”

Featured products will include fresh produce, gourmet meats, value-added products including jams, jellies and salsas, hand-spun wool, bath and body care items, honey and maple syrup. The event will also include a “Dine-Around” where visitors can purchase dishes from Charleston-area restaurants. Grab a meal, shop West Virginia products and listen to great music courtesy of The Half Bad Bluegrass Band.

A new feature to the Winter Blues Market, as well as the Small Farm Conference, is a video scrapbook project. Anyone with an agriculture-related story is invited to stop by the booth and share. Visitors are also asked to fill out a brief survey on their Winter Blues experience when they leave the market.

Admission is free and the event will include door prizes and hourly activities for children, such as story times, a pretend “milk cow,” coloring and activity sheets. Other attractions will include West Virginia Grown popcorn and maple cotton candy.

The Winter Blues Farmers’ Market is sponsored by the WVDA and the WVU Extension Small Farm Center and is held in conjunction with the West Virginia Small Farm Conference.

Now in its 13th year, the Small Farm Conference offers numerous educational sessions on an extensive variety of agricultural topics aimed at helping food producers operate knowledgeably, efficiently and profitably by providing reliable, tested knowledge about current trends, needed skills and the latest production and operation information.

The 2016 Small Farm Conference averaged 700 in daily attendance and featured 140 different sessions. The Winter Blues Farmers’ Market attracted an estimated 3,000 shoppers and raised $25,000 for vendors.
