Andor Peppers, LLC

Andor Peppers is a family-owned, seed-to-table company. Andy and Dorrie started sending small bottles of sauce, pepper mustard, salsa and chutney to family and friends as Christmas gifts. That relaxing hobby turned into a full-fledged business in 2020. "Maybe it's the sandy soil, the altitude or fresh mountain air, but peppers really like to grow on our little slice of "Almost Heaven" on the banks of the Cheat River in Preston County," Andy says.

Heasley Homestead

Since 2015, Keith Heasley has been tapping maple trees at the Heasley Homestead in Bruceton Mills, West Virginia. Since that first year, he has refined the technique and incorporated industry improvements to help perfect the process. Colorful blue and green tubing connects these majestic trees and, when the time is right, the freezing nights and above freezing days of late winter and early spring offer up that sweet goodness. Red maple and sugar maple trees come together here to create a uniquely flavorful syrup in amber, dark and very dark grades.

Sickler Farm

Farming is in Jeff Sickler's blood. His great-grandfather grew produce and his grandfather was a dairy farmer. In 2009, he and his wife Lisa purchased 140 acres of land in Barbour County. They initially thought they'd raise hay. After consulting with Jason Teets, a NRCS conservationist, they realized they could earn more money growing vegetables. Today they have six high tunnels, two greenhouses and three acres of fields. The farm hosts a fall festival every year where visitors can press apple cider, grind cornmeal and tour the farm.
