Sloping Acres

Sloping Acres is a small, urban farm. The operation is on less than an acre of land, but owner Donna Myles knows how to make the most out of small spaces. The farm features a small greenhouse and four small high tunnels. She also leases property from a neighbor for outdoor growing. Sloping Acres jams and jellies are made with fruit from their property and their black walnuts are sourced right from their back yard.

Spring Creek Superior Meats, LLC

Kevin Mullens and his family started their business in 2020 during the pandemic when there was a demand for fresh, quality beef, pork and lamb. At first, the family was filling a lot of small orders. Over time, that has changed. Mullens stresses their steers, hogs and lambs are born and finished on the farm. They raise heritage hogs, Simmental and Angus steers and hair sheep.

Sunset Berry Farm

Sunset Berry Farm sits atop beautiful Flat Mountain in Alderson where Farmer Kent is a third-generation strawberry grower. During strawberry season (May and June) families flock to the farm to pick their own berries. The farm also hosts the West Virginia Sunflower Festival on Labor Day weekend. Farmer Kent and his wife Jennifer are passionate about providing premium fruits and veggies to their community. "We love to see our guests connect with nature, discover the source of their food and experience the difference when fruits and veggies are harvested by hand, fresh from the earth," says Kent.

Valley View Farm Hero Honey

David McMillan is a U.S. Military veteran with 26 years of service and an active member of the WV Army National Guard. He compares being a soldier to the honeybees he keeps. "Much like soldiers in a platoon, each honeybee has a very specific mission inside of the hive in order for the hive to be successful and survive, while understanding that the survival of the hive will ultimately cost each drone bee and worker bee its own life."

Woodbine Jams and Jellies, Inc.

Friends Libby Deitz and Levada Hodovan started Woodbine Jams & Jellies many years ago using the techniques their mothers taught them in their kitchens growing up. When Libby passed away in 2010, Levada carried on the tradition. She relies on her friends and family to help pick fresh berries for her products. The company now produces 18 kinds of jams and jellies, including the newest offering - ramp jelly.
